The first cemetery in the city was located on the west side of Maple Grove, on the north side of what is now Chest Street. There is a tradition that this site was first used as a burial place by the people of 18th century, during the war of 1812, but the first recorded burials there took place in 1815. From that time until the opening of Maple Grove Cemetery in 1868, all the dead of Findlay were buried here. In 1871 the city council passed an ordinance ordering the removal by relocation, of all bodies from the site to Eagle Creek Cemetery. This order, however, was not carried out, and the old cemetery was abandoned to give place to the new one. In 1880, the bodies were removed to the new site, and were reburied in order.	489

EAGLE CREEK, FINDLAY
OR EAST FINDLAY CEMETERY

The first cemetery in Findlay was situated on the east bank of Eagle Creek, on the south side of East Main Cross Street. There is a tradition that this site was first used as a burial place by the garrison of Ft. Findlay, during the War of 1812, but the first recorded burials there took place in 1819. From that time until the opening of Maple Grove Cemetery in 1856, all who died in Findlay were buried in this cemetery. In 1871 the town council passed an ordinance ordering the removal, by relatives, of all bodies from Eagle Creek to Maple Grove. There was some opposition to this order, and in 1892, when the old cemetery was abandoned to give right of way to the Findlay Belt Railway, the following were still buried there, and were removed by order of Findlay Council to a place furnished for them in Maple Grove Cemetery.
